

Wine Competition results 2012, for English Wines

Stuart McKenzie Graham. <http://kenziwine.wordpress.com/>

This work is just an informal piece for a bit of fun for my interest. Still, feedback would be appreciated, and there may also be transcription errors which I'd love to hear about. I don't have any vested interest in any of the wines.

Now that many 2012 wine award results are out, we can decide which wines are best, right? Well, no. Awards can be inconsistent between competitions with formal studies having been written on the matter which conclude that luck plays a large part. However, as a bit of fun I thought I'd try to look through the 2012 results for English Wines and see if any patterns emerge, and also look at whether the results are that inconsistent. However, simply slamming the results together and stuffing them through a stats package is not so simple. Firstly there's matching all the data (by far the longest and most painful task) and working out whether this 'brut sparkling' is really the same as that 'brut' and grouping up the various "rose" and "rosé" together for example. And different producers enter different competitions, so the data is very sparse. And then how is one to judge, for example, an IWSC 'silver outstanding' against a Decanter 'silver' or a UKVA 'gold'? And should all competitions be judged equal, or are some more equal than others?

Well, I had a stab at coming up with a basic model to include some of the relevant factors, and I've written up a full list of all the consolidated results. It's important to note that I do not have access to the full list of competition wine which were entered but did not even get a commendation: so in my list below where there's blank it probably means the wine was not entered, but it might mean it didn't cut it.

So, I got results ('commended' up to 'trophy') from 5 competitions (IWC, IWSC, Decanter, UKVA and SEVA) and decided to weight all competitions equally. I mashed all the data together and recorded for each wine which award (if any) it had in each competition. I translated 'highly commended' to 'commended' and then came up with a somewhat arbitrary scoring system so I could do some light data analysis across the different competitions, as follows:

Medal	Points
Trophy	5
Gold outstanding	4.5
Gold	4
Silver outstanding	3.5
Silver	3
Bronze	2
Commended	1

Both this points schedule and the equal weighting of competitions I have left easily configurable in my model, so if I hear any better suggestions.....

I then calculated, for each wine, the average score. I also looked at the standard deviation of each wine's scores as a way of casually inspecting whether there really is a widespread variance in results between competitions. Remember that most wines only enter a few competitions, so this is all a bit apples-and-oranges here. 'Blanks' where a wine either didn't enter or didn't make the cut are excluded. The average standard deviation is 0.7, with the highest three standard deviations of 1.7, 1.5 and 1.4 for Hush Heath Rosé '08, Ridgeview Marksman '09 and Gusbourne Blanc de blancs '07 respectively. Well, I've certainly heard the first two of these split opinion in the past, so I don't find it too surprising that judges seem to have found the same. But it does seem there's a fair few wines which are commended in one and silver in another competition, for example.

Well, what to say about the list below? It's what it is: nothing conclusive and with challenges and choices in terms of how it's calculated. If anyone wants to do some proper analysis than I'd be happy to share my spreadsheet. It's interesting that the top (4 pointers) only entered 1 competition: whether this is cause or effect is ambiguous. Most impressive for me on the list are the Camel Valley Rosé sparkling 2010, Furleigh Bacchus Fumé 2010, Furleigh Classic Cuveé 2009 and the Denbies Late Harvest 2011 which all have high medals in multiple competitions.

On a more general note I'd suggest that if anyone's interested in doing this properly from the perspective of judging the competitions rather than looking at English Wine, it would be sensible to look at a cross-country analysis and to get hold of the full results lists which include those wines not to have been awarded at all. Of course more serious stats analysis would be needed.
